a Dream BY AUGUSTUS SNODGRASS.

'T was Midnight! and the Student gazed Upon his lamp, which feebly blazed, Flickering to and fro; And, rising from his book, his eyes Glanced o'er the star-emblazon'd skies, Then on the vales below.

Silent the forest cast its shade; While scarce a sound the river played That 'neath his window ran; Sleep, filled with soul-delighting charms, Embraced within her kindly arms The varied soul of Man!

The student felt the hallowed heur, And rushing to his soul with power, An ancient dream was brought; Deeply-he mused; his heart seemed riven; And there alone with Night and Heaven, He struggled with his Thought!

Before his eyes there seemed to roll Scenes cherished by his infant soul, And buried in his breast; The humble cottage on the plain;

The childhood voices laughed again

With mirth in vain repress'd! The forest waved before his eyes; Once more the steep hill seemed to rise; The laughing stream rushed on; The valley glittered with its flowers; The birds again sang in their bowers,

Or sported in the sun! His Childhood's flowers are on the blast; His feet have from the cottage passed, And wander trembling forth; And, buckling on the arms of Man,

He sought to conquer in the van The wished-for joys of earth! With other tongues he learned to speak, And Thought began its powers to wreak Within his opening mind; His Soul arose and bared its blade; Its banner in the tempest played And fluttered in the wind.

In vain !- the prize before him fled : Yet still he marched with hurried tread, And burning eye the while! A gentle voice is in his breast; His eager step is half repress'd; He falters with a smile!

A whispering Hope is in his soul; A wish-his heart cannot control, And scarce his tongue can name; A wildness fills his blazing eye; His books are thrown unheeded by ; His bosom feels a flame!

O what can make this world of ours, More like the wish'd-for heavenly bowers, Than love exchanged for love? The Patriarch's vision seems to rise; A thousand angels throng the skies, And down the ladder move!

Love's chains are pleasing, tho' they're strong His Heart leaps upward with a song, And deems the prize is found; But like an an eagle, tempest-driven, Headlong adown the warring Heaven, It flutters on the ground!

In vain the Hope !- the Wish in vain! The sought-for prize is lost again-Lost ever to his eye;

Like a stern captive, doomed to feel The chain, the torture and the steel, He bears his agony !

That ancient dream is over now; But Age is seated on his brow, And Age is in his eye; And, like a Pilgrim from afar, Bent in a weary life of war,

He seeks his home to die! And thus within that hallowed bower, On-rushing to his soul with power That ancient dream was brought; And thus alose with Night and Heaven,

And thus he mused; his heart was riven, He struggled with his Thought! Norwick, N. Y.

The Sandwich Islands.

Among the documents submitted to Congress by the President with his Message is a correspondence between Messrs. Haalilio and Richards, Agents from the Hawaiian or Sandwich Islands, and our Secretary of State. The following passage from the letter of the Agents contains information of gratifying interest concerning the progress of the Islands in civilization and the comforts of life, and the advantages of friendly intercourse with the United States:

Twenty-three years ago the nation had no written language, and no character in which to write it. The language had never been systematized nor reduced to any kind of form. The people had no acquaintance with Christianity, nor with the valuable institutions or usages of civilized life .-The nation had no fixed form or regulations of Government, except as they were dictated by those who were in authority, or might by any means acquire power. The right of property was not acknowledged, and was therefore but partially enjoyed. There were no courts of justice, and the will of the chieftains was absolute. The property of foreigners had no protection, except in the kind disposition of individuals. But, under the fostering influence, patronage and care of his Majesty, and that of his predecessors, the language has been reduced to visible and systematized form, and is now written by a large and respectable proportion of the people.

Schools have been established throughout his dominions, and are supported principally by the Government; and there are but few, among the younger people who are unable to read. They have now in their own language a library, embracing a considerable variety of books, on a variety of subjects. including the Holy Scriptures, works on natural history, civil history, church history, geography. political economy, mathematics, and statute law; besides a number of elementary books. A regular monarchical Government has been organized, of a limited and representative character, a translation of the constitution of which we herewith transmit. A code of laws, both civil and criminal, has been enacted and published. The Legislature holds an annual meeting, for the purpose of adding to and amending this code. Courts of justice have been established, and regular trials by jury required in all important cases. man.

the courts of other countries. Consuls and commercial agents resident in his Majesty's dominions, and also of all commanders of national vessels visiting those dominions, to demand all that pretection, both of person and of property, which is demanded of sovereign and independent States, and this, his Majesty believes, has been duly and efficiently extended. While, therefore, all is demanded of his Government, and all is rendered by it, which is demanded of or It has, moreover, been the uniform practice of rendered by the Governments of sovereign and independent States, he feels that he has a right to expect his State to be acknowledged as such, and thus be formally received into the general compact of sovereign nations. In the request which his Majesty hereby makes to the Gavernment of the United States, he has of course for his direct object the premotion of the interest of his own kingdom; but he is also very fully convinced that the important interests of all the great commercial nations will also be materially subserved by his dominions remaining, as they have hitherto been, independent.

Their position is such that they constitute the great centre of the whale fishery for most of the world. They are an the principal line of communication between the western continent of America and the eastern continent of Asia; and such are the prevailing winds on that ocean that all vessels requiring repairs or supplies, either of provisions or of water, naturally touch at those islands, whether the vessels sail from Columbia river on the north, or from the far distant ports of Mexico. Central America or Peru, upon the south; and it should be farther added that there is no other place in all that part of the Pacific ocean where repairs of vessels can be made to so good an advantage, or supplies be obtained in such abundance and on so favorable terms.

His Majesty wishes also to remind the Government of the United States that the amount of property belonging to their citizens, which is either landed at or enters the various harbors and roadsteads of his dominions, and is consequently more or less dependent on the protection of his Government, cannot be less than from five to seven millions of dollars annually. This property lies in some ninety or a hundred whaling ships and their cargoes, and in some twelve or fifteen merchant vessels, besides also a considerable amount of other property belonging to American citizens on shore. At some seasons there has not been less than three or four millions of dollars' worth of American property, and some fourteen hundred American citizens at the same time, at the various ports of the Island, requiring consequently, in some degree, the protection of his Majesty; and he has the happiness of believing that efficient and satisfactory aid has always been extended to those who have required it. In evidence corroborative of many of the facts herein stated, the undersigned do not hesitate to refer to documentary evidence, which they believe must be among the papers in your Department of State, recently furnished by masters of national vessels, but more especially by the United States Commercial Agent residing at Honolulu.

Upon these grounds his Majesty Kamhameha, desires the acknowledgement on the part of the United States of the independence of the Sandwich

Mr. WEBSTER in reply, says that the President is aware of the gratifying prospects of the Sandwich Islands, and of the deep interest the United States has in the preservation of their independence .-Still he sees no necessity for any further treaty stipulations. A Consul will continue to reside there as heretofore.

Also, I have been personally acquainted in cases of others who have used it with like results. It is evidently an agreeable and efficacious medicine, and may be taken freely without prejudicial effects upon the system. In this last respect particularly it is decidedly superior to the generality of articles of the kind now offered in the market as safe and karmless medicine, and is thereby, in connection with its medicinal merits, justly entitled to the first and highest confidence of those who may wish the relief which it claims to afford.
